

Robinson Crusoe hung the grapes upon the trees where the sun was shining. He knew the sun would dry the grapes through. When they were dried they would make good raisins.